

Attorneys Consolidate Quickly With Law School Loans

Borrowers are running out of time to consolidate their student loans.

On July 1, interest rates for student loans will rise, and students and graduates who do not consolidate now will be unable to avoid paying more than is necessary on their loans.

As well-informed consumers are rushing to process paperwork to meet this deadline, Law School Loans is making an extra effort to ensure that its law student and attorney clientele experiences the least wait time and the least frustration when going through the consolidation process.

First, Law School Loans guarantees a quick application. Because we are able to offer our valued clients a secure E-Signature system, most of our borrowers can complete an online application in less than one hour. Others can call our experienced loan specialists to complete an application over the phone in about 10 minutes.

For Law School Loans clients who prefer a pen-and-paper signature, we guarantee 24-hour turnaround on all paperwork and free overnight FedEx shipping for these important documents.

Once an application is complete, borrowers need never worry about their student loans again; however, Law School Loans' work does not end until the consolidation loan is completely disbursed.

Because borrowers usually have loans from multiple lenders, Law School Loans must obtain important documents from each student loan company before the consolidation is complete and borrowers can start enjoying the benefits of having one low monthly payment.

Some student loan companies are reluctant to release this information. That's why Law School Loans begins an aggressive campaign to contact the company and get the documents after 10 days. If the information is not released to our company within 10 days of our requesting it, our loan specialists will begin following up with near-daily phone calls to the original lender.

No other company offers this kind of client care. Law School Loans guarantees fast processing for consolidation paperwork, and our loan specialists will work around the clock to get your consolidation loan disbursed quickly.
